

Covid-19 can have obstacles as quick as a clap.
I will tell you about it in this rap.

It all feels like I'm in a different dimension.
Everyone appears to not have any sense of direction.

People are feeling scared and helpless, and need to feel some sort of control, so they flock to the store to buy the last roll.

All I hear now is make sure to "mask up" and to "stay back", or Covid germs will attack.

During virtual learning, I feel frustrated with the home computer glitching, and all of the Covid rules, constantly switching.

I'm exhausted with the social distancing, virtual listening, and reinventing
the way I learn.

I feel surrounded with parents and teachers with constant concern.
Despite the frustration and confusion, times like these bring insight and reflection ...

I am forever grateful to have spent days of isolation with my brother, mom, and dad. which makes me realize that isolation from outside demands really wasn't so bad.
